Skills training to open doors for local youth

Five young people in Kenhardt are taking steps towards a brighter future through our 12-month occupational health and safety training programme. The two young men and three young women are gaining practical workplace experience and working towards a qualification that could open doors to employment.

Alongside their training, they receive career mentorship, protective equipment and a stipend. After completing the programme and external assessment, they will be eligible to receive certification from the Quality Council for Trades and Occupations, equipping them to pursue opportunities in industries such as renewable energy, construction, mining and manufacturing.
