A hair care idea grows into a local business

After struggling to find work for more than three years, Khomotso Mosebodi Beauty Moko found hope in starting her own business. Her Bochum business, Shi Organics, makes organic hair and beauty products and offers beauty and wellness services.

Support from our Youth Entrepreneurship Programme has helped her buy production equipment and materials, improve product quality and invest in training and marketing. The business has created four local jobs and hopes to reach more customers across Limpopo and eventually nationwide.

With ongoing guidance, Khomotso is learning new ways to manage and grow her business.

MORE FROM THE COMMUNITY

COMMUNITY

Around 350 young entrepreneurs attended information sessions to learn where to find business support.

Hosted by Soutpan Solar Power with municipalities and other partners, the sessions helped young people understand available programmes, ask questions and make connections that could help them start or strengthen businesses within their own communities.

YOUTH

Electrical engineering graduate Lesetsa Ramalepe is gaining practical experience through an internship at our plant.

Since joining he has helped with plant monitoring and maintenance while learning from experienced professionals. The opportunity is helping him understand how a solar facility operates, build technical skills and grow in confidence as he prepares for his career.
